Q: Using a nested generic type I have a generic class defining a data interface: `public class TData { }` And a list of type defined as following `public class TList : List { }` Is it possible to define a generic list of type `TList`? I'm getting errors saying `TList` cannot be defined for the reasons "Generic type argument requires a parameterless constructor" A: Use generic type constraints `public class TData { }` `public class TList : List { }` `public class TData { }` `public class GenericList : List { }` // test `public void Test(TList> list)` where `TItem : new() { }` // test `public void Test(GenericList> list)` where `TItem : new() { }` It's obviously more verbose. All that said, if you intend to use the `TList` later on in your code, or are willing to add an interface, your current solution would be the best option for the moment. `public interface ITree { }` `public class TData : ITree { }` `public class TList : List : ITree { }` `public class TData { }` `public class GenericList : List`
